

DEPENDS ON FANS IF CALIFORNIA VISITS US

Followers of Baseball Must Support Oahu League If They Expect Mainland Teams To Play Here. What Swain Said

Stanford has evicted on the diamond at Mollili Field in four games now and the boys have got by in good shape and given the fans an article of baseball well worth the witnessing. Of course, one of those four games was below the mark, but when one team plays town let baseball as did the All-Japanese, the work of the other team pales into insignificance and the fans in most cases will pass it off as a bad contest all around. Fans must not look at things in this light and should bear in mind that playing baseball is a far different sport than sitting on the bench and watching it. Stanford has been used to playing baseball underneath a near tropical sun and while climatical conditions in Honolulu are not objectionable, the warm sunshine has a tendency to take the ginger out of a ball player until he gets used to it. By next Saturday afternoon Stanford will be used to our conditions here, and while their playing has been good so far, it is bound to be better. Another thing, our local teams in most instances are stronger than a year ago, and are playing much better ball.

Commenting on the Cardinal players individually, Manager Wilcox has a fairly good college team, although those who saw the Californians a year ago, particularly in their games with the All-Chinese, will vote the Blue and Gold aggregation the better of the two. While it is still a far cry as to whether the Californians are to come here next month for a four weeks' stay, the followers of the game are looking forward to such an event, for the All-Chinese will have returned home from their triumphant tour of the Orient and a series between the Californians and the champions of the Far East would be well worth while.

Must Have Support
Of course, the financing of the Californians' trip to Honolulu is a big item, nearly $3000 would be needed to get the team here and to maintain them for a month. Truly it is a big outlay of money for the Oahu Leaguers to make to give the fans baseball, and they bring the ones to profit by witnessing some classy baseball, should be willing to pay the freight.

The present series in which Stanford is competing are not coming up to the mark, that is, the gate receipts are falling below the expectations of the sponsors for the Stanford team. While money is not going to be lost on the venture, there is not going to be much of a profit for the Oahu League. Not because the teams are playing ball at Mollili Field, but for the reason that there is a lack of interest in the national pastime, is the cause of the fans going somewhere else on baseball days. It is the cycle of sports. At certain times someone pulls a blower in the game and the fans declare baseball off their list of amusements. Then is the time to call a halt and give the supporters of the game a rest. In the case of the fans here, that rest, and to revive the game the Oahu League brings the Stanford team here and to make no bones of it, Senator A. L. Castle is willing to bring the Californians here if the fans show him they want baseball. It is not a question of dollars and cents with Castle. It is simply a true sportsman with baseball at heart willing to keep the game going.

Keep Game Going
If Honolulu fans have had their fill of baseball, well and good, the Oahu League can shut up shop and decline the issue as far as mainland teams are concerned, but it seems a pity that such a town as Honolulu, with all its red-blooded sportsmen, should allow baseball to become a dead letter. Of course, the fans got a real deal in the Venice series and it may be added that the big leaguers were a disappointment. Still the mainland has its ups and downs in baseball and the game still goes on, and it should still go on here.

This much is certain: If the Stanford series fail to bring forth the old-time interest in the game, outside attractions here will be paid for a long time to come. Without finances, the Oahu League cannot bring the Californians here nor can they take a chance with the University of Chicago team.

No angel is on the horizon at this writing with a bank roll to bring the Venice Tigers, for instance, for the last angel with a seizure of gate receipts, in junctions and what not, had his fill and the backers of the All-American and All-National series can not see their way clear to again tackle the proposition.

This leaves the field entirely up to

WAIHOLE TUNNEL PROVES AN OBJECT LESSON FOR CITY

Mayor and Supervisors Are Shown How Water Problem Can Be Solved

SIMILAR BORE WOULD SUSTAIN MUNICIPALITY

John T. McCrosson Tells Board Members How To Give Honolulu Permanent Relief

(From Thursday's Advertiser)

Supervisors of Honolulu and Mayor Lane inspected the Waihole water tunnel yesterday, seeking information that may be of use to the city in solving its water problem. They left the city hall in automobiles at eight-thirty o'clock yesterday morning and returned at four o'clock in the afternoon. Another trip will be made tomorrow, to Waihole, where work on the other end of the big water project is going forward.

When the supervisors had returned to the end of the tunnel railroad, John T. McCrosson made an extemporaneous talk at a luncheon. In this he gave the supervisors something to think about.

"Talk about your promotion committee and promotion literature—why, if we could say that Honolulu receives water that is filtered through from 1500 to 2000 feet of volcanic rock we would be able to say something that no other city in the world could say," said Mr. McCrosson.

Fine Municipal Investment

"You have seen today what we have done. I believe that the city, for $1,500,000, could dig a tunnel that would supply 50,000,000 gallons of water a day. The city uses from 17,000,000 to 18,000,000 now. Say it uses 30,000,000, which leaves 20,000,000 that could be sold to sugar planters. They will pay $5000 a million gallons a year, and that means an income of $100,000. This would pay the interest at four per cent, on the tunnel's cost, and leave a sinking fund to retire the bonds. The tunnel not only would supply the city with water of unparalleled purity, but it would be a fine investment; it would pay for itself.

All the supervisors except Supervisor Larsen went to the tunnel. H. E. Murray, superintendent of waterworks, planned to go, but he made an address to the Ad Club yesterday noon.

The feature of the game, as the baseball reporters say, was the exploration of the tunnel. After a ride on the tunnel railroad, a narrow-gauge line which twisted and puffed its way up the mountain side, the party arrived before the mouth of the big bore. Each man removed most of his clothing and put on an oil coat and rubber hat.

Tenderfoot Shed Shoes

They didn't wear shoes. Mr. McCrosson said: "My feet are as tender as yours; look at me!" He wore no shoes, so no one else did.

A little electric locomotive took two small cars, loaded with the city's executive and legislative dignity, into the dim tunnel. Each man bore a candle. Along the walls electric lights gleamed: the mouth of the tunnel was a narrow square of blue.

Jeff of water gushed from the basalt walls. The electric locomotive stopped with a bump. It was walking from this on.

Everyone stepped into the water, bare feet and all. It wasn't ice-cold, but it was next door in the same street. One couldn't exactly call it warm. But, after one's feet got used to it, he didn't mind the cold so much.

Besides, there was the lava rock underfoot. The exquisite torture a boy feels at the first barefoot days of spring was nothing to what the supervisors—and others—felt. Nothing at all! It seemed that hundreds of needles and razor blades were biting hungrily at the soles of feet.

"Oh, why didn't I wear my shoes as I planned!" moaned "Bob" Shingle. He is what might be called a tenderfoot.

"Watch out for the wires!" some one called out. That meant that the electric wires on the right had "juiced" enough to make one forget all about the lava. That showed how nicely revenue, until the city is ready to put affairs on a business-like basis.

Flat Rate An Injustice

The injustice of a flat rate is essential and cannot be eliminated by any adjustment. A family of two pays the same rate as a family of six occupying the same premises, although the larger family, other things being equal, naturally consumes more water.

Estimated revenues of the department for the current year will be $180,000, Superintendent Murray said, and estimated expenditures $171,000, leaving a balance of $9000.

On account, however, of extensions and improvements and the necessity for setting aside a sinking fund of $25,000, this balance will be converted to a deficit in 1916. Hence the need for increased revenues and new rates.

Cost of Pumping Low

Overhead and operating expenses are being kept down as low as possible. The pump payroll is now $2250 a month and the overhead charge $2100. A survey of privileges now under way will cost $4000, and already has yielded increased earnings of $3000 annually.

The department favors, as already published, the expenditure of a sum sufficient to put the city into possession of the 3,500,000 artesian gallons from the condensers of the Hawaiian Electric and the Rapid Transit now going to waste daily through the sewers.

HEMENWAY JOINS COMMERCIAL FIRM

Well-Known Attorney Will Enter Legal Department of Alexander & Baldwin

Announcement was made yesterday that Charles R. Hemenway of Smith, Warren, Hemenway & Sutton, attorneys, shortly will assume an executive position with Alexander & Baldwin, Ltd.

John Waterhouse will continue as assistant manager of Alexander and Baldwin, with Mr. Hemenway next in rank, and John Guild will continue as secretary of Alexander and Baldwin and of the affiliated plantation companies.

Ever since E. E. Paxton left Alexander and Baldwin a year ago, the firm has felt itself to be weak in its legal department. The decision more recently of S. A. Baldwin to devote his time exclusively to the Haleakala ranch and sever his connection with Alexander and Baldwin increased the desire of the firm to strengthen its staff.

Members Smith, Warren and Sutton said yesterday that Mr. Hemenway had received an offer he could not afford to refuse, and that they were sorry to lose him. What readjustment of their business his retirement will make they are not yet ready to discuss.

Part of the time there was a plank in the middle of the railroad track to walk upon and part of the time there wasn't. The 250 feet the supervisors and others—walked is the longest 250 feet in the world. It is longer than the distance from Honolulu to San Francisco—walking.

Finally, the end came. By the flickering light of candles, the blunt end of the work was surveyed. Drill holes punctured it like a Swiss cheese. Work had gone thus far and no farther.

Then the party walked back to the cars over the needles and razors that Pele hid in the mountain when she forged it.

The volume of water was amazing. Jorgensen, engineer and contractor, said that there was a flow of 31,000,000 gallons daily, 22,000,000 from the main shaft and 9,000,000 from the secondary shaft he had to drive to relieve the other of its surplus and make it possible for the Japanese to work there in the semi-gloom. Jets spouted from the mountain's severed arteries on every side; shot into the face; ran down the sleeve when one steadied himself against a wall while standing on a sharp pinnacle of lava; dashed into the back at odd times. The tunnel rang with the sound of rushing waters; the solid lava, undisturbed since Pele made that famous jump to Kilauea, was alive with spurting fluid.

World of Water There

No, it appeared that Mr. Jorgensen was wrong; there was not 31,000,000 of water there; there was all the water in the world.

At any rate, everyone got back and found his feet were not bleeding at all—all except two, who didn't go with-in.

Still, no one would have missed that walk for a million dollars! Despite the lava and the cold water and the rushing siphon and the electric current tangling on the right, it was worth all it cost—and more.

When the party returned to the air again and got on the little train, there was a pelting rain.

The weather outside doesn't know how to rain. Whatever Hawaiian duty it is that has charge of the rain outside should go take lessons from Mr. Jorgensen's tunnel.

Those who went were Mayor Lane, E. A. H. Watson, a visitor here; Supervisors Arnold, Horner, Hollinger, Ahia, Shingle, Logan, J. T. McCrosson, City Engineer Whitehouse, J. A. Balch, J. Jorgensen, Robert Bicknell, Fritz Koeling and one (count 'em one) newspaper reporter.

His feet hurt worst (with apologies to Supervisor Shingle).

Flat Water Rate Is Not Equitable

"In my judgment, no flat rate is equitable," said Superintendent Murray of the water department to the Ad Club yesterday.

That is why the superintendent favors metering the city, but he went on to explain that, in the meantime, more money is needed for necessary betterments and extensions. For the present therefore, the department sees nothing better than to muddle through with the old imperfect and unjust system, amending it to produce more revenue, until the city is ready to put affairs on a business-like basis.

The injustice of a flat rate is essential and cannot be eliminated by any adjustment. A family of two pays the same rate as a family of six occupying the same premises, although the larger family, other things being equal, naturally consumes more water.

Estimated revenues of the department for the current year will be $180,000, Superintendent Murray said, and estimated expenditures $171,000, leaving a balance of $9000.
